House of the Rising Sun

NATALIE YOUNG/RISING SUN & CO.

LOS ANGELES

Everything, even in the fast-paced world of fashion, comes full circle. And that's part of the appeal of RIISING SUN & CO.'s sturdy, well-tailored men's denim collection, which harkens back to a time when every article of clothing was made by hand — by the designer. The brand, which is developing a cult following, has a newly opened workshop-turned-store complete with antique fixtures and displays in the Eagle Rock neighborhood of Los Angeles. A majority of the items for sale are finished on-site in the workshop. Being made in America is more than a talking point for founder and chief designer Mike Hodis, who used to design for Lucky Brand. Selvage fabric made by Cone Denim Mills in North Carolina and hardware produced in Kentucky are crafted together to bring Hodis' designs to life. Tried-and-true cuts and worn-in washes are signatures, with custom hemming services available as needed. "We strive to create a balance between the familiar and progressive by utilizing great design, quality fabrics and finishes that are rooted in America's ingenuity of old," Hodis says. Those who aren't in L.A. can find Rising Sun's wares in a few boutiques around the globe, at Barneys in New York and on its website. After all, a well-made pair of jeans is an instant classic. $225 to $425, www.risingsunjeans.com

Teatime Refreshment

A spa should cater to your well-being inside and out. The LAPIS SPA AT FONTAINEBLEAU HOTEL MIAMI BEACH takes this to heart with its new juice- and tea-based detox offerings. To set the scene, in addition to the complimentary lemon-infused water that most spas offer, Lapis also indulges guests with other tasty variations including pineapple, blueberry and watermelon. "We encourage our guests to be lavish with consumption," says Josie Feria, director of spa operations. "Many of our treatments involve hot water, which can be overheating, so we suggest you ingest quite a bit of water." For a deeper cleansing experience, try a special detoxing tea blend containing natural ingredients like algae and organically grown plants. "These teas reduce edema and cleanse the body. They complement our wrap and lymphatic-drainage treatments," Feria explains. The spa also features drinks with targeted nutrition, like citrus lemonade with cleansing chia seeds; protein- and probiotic-packed kombucha; and even vitamin-packed raw beet juice. "We're not only conscious of the benefits," Feria says. "We are true and loyal to the concept of a spa being a place for rejuvenation."

The Test of Time

Move over, smartphones. When it comes to telling time, wristwatches have made a triumphant return. These days, it's simply about finding yourself the right ticker to showcase. Thankfully, MULCO WATCHES offers 10 lines of analog, unisex styles sure to suit any personality. Though the brand originated in Switzerland in 1958, a core group of designers and watch technicians has reimaged Mulco for the millennium, combining dynamic colors with textured materials (think steel, rubber, aluminum, ceramic and silicon) to create wearable works of art that are also functional.

Collections include Fondo, a fun range of hues including deep purple, vibrant yellow and blue — perfect for a casual weekend — and Nuit, which offers a bolder look. Captivated by Formula One races? Check out Mulco's selection of Prix timepieces. Or, for conveying stark sophistication, the leather-strapped Citta is ideal. While most of the watches feature Swiss chronographs, they all have one thing in common: They make time look good. From $225, www.mulco.com —LAURA KINIRY
